Dear Jim:

My roommate just came into the room and boy is he mad. He said the so and so Arka-Tech never would print anything good about him. I said maybe he had never done anything good and he said he hadn't. He said he made a "C" in Economics and he had read every word of the last three issues and there wasn't a thing about him. I said I reckoned they just had it in for him. He said he had just read in the Arka-Tech where the girl he was going out with was going out with somebody else, but that he was consoling himself with another girl.

The editor of the Arka-Tech is a boy named Adler. This Adler is a sportswriter. My roommate says the only reason he writes sports is he gets the best seats at the ball games. I heard him say I figured this Olama really liked sports because he said he shot a fast stick in pooh and I saw him playing the pinball machine once. My roommate said he could be wrong.

The head hog on the Aggieola is a character called Navis. He is really a sharp boy -- knows all about newspapers and stuff -- he thinks the deadline means the Judgment Day. My roommate says from the way he is progressing he may know what he is talking about. The other day I told him I had something of my stuff. He said he didn't have to have any poop check that I had written it. He sure is a trusting soul.

The staff has as much to say about the paper as the editor. Like one time this year the editor wanted to take a strong editorial stand against smoking in the classroom. We voted it down though because we figured it was too controversial. Besides we believe in live and let live.

I'll mail this as quick as I fill my pipe.

Your buddy,

Jack
